Note: The course will begin (May 5-9) with five-day intensive introduction to zooarchaeology, vertebrate osteology, and natural history by zoom. Students will then meet in Salt Lake City (May 12) and we will proceed from there on a 6-day camping field trip across the state of Utah. We will explore many of the most important archaeological sites in the Great Basin and Colorado Plateau (e.g., Danger Cave, Hogup cave, Lakeside Cave, Homestead Cave, Cowboy Cave, Sudden Shelter, Bonneville Estates Rockshelter) and study the different habitats and vertebrate faunas of the regions. We will then stay for the remainder of the course (May 18-30) at the remote and scenic Range Creek Field Station in eastern Utah with continued field and lab studies and lectures on various topics in zooarchaeology. Students will complete a problem-oriented research project at the field station and present an oral presentation on that work at a conference on May 30. We depart on May 31. To determine the last day to drop this miscellaneous course, see http://registrar.utah.edu/handbook/miscellaneous.php Note: Admission to the Zooarchaeology and Field Ecology Field School is by application only, see details at: https://anthro.utah.edu/fieldschools/zooarchaeology_fieldschool.php Students can also email the professor for additional details at: jack.broughton@anthro.utah.edu

06/20/2025 - 07/03/2025 Meets with: BIOL 5960 Note: This interdisciplinary, immersive course engages students with hands-on opportunities to learn about green building methods and the impacts the built environment has on human and ecosystem health. Topics covered include causes of poor indoor air quality; methods of mitigation; the environmental impact of the building sector including the carbon footprint and recyclability at the end of life of a building; and solutions to how to build sustainably. Students will participate in building small, off-grid cabins at the Bonderman Field Station out of sustainable building materials including earthen methods (rammed earth, adobe, cob) and building with carbon negative materials such hempcrete and straw bale. This course will be valuable to students of human health, urban ecology, global warming, sustainability, architecture, design, and construction. This course will count as an L2 lab in the Biology major. The dates for this section of the field course are: June 20-July 3, 2025.

BIOL 5800-001 06/20/2025 - 07/30/2025 Note: Solving the unsolvable: AI and the evolution of protein structure determination. Protein structure determination or structural biology plays a crucial role in understanding biology at the molecular level by allowing us to visualize and interpret the three-dimensional structure of proteins, nucleic acids, and other biological macromolecules. This course will cover three major protein structure determination methods and review the impact of Artificial Intelligence (AI) technology on scientists' ability to solve complex and dynamic protein structures. Topics in this course will include protein purification, nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR), X-ray crystallography, cryo-electron microscopy (cryo-EM), machine learning, and AI protein structure prediction software. The course will include a combination of assigned readings and homework, class discussions, team-based learning, and in-class activities. In addition to covering the course content, this course will integrate learning strategies for reading and interpreting scientific literature. Key goals of this course include improving critical thinking skills, scientific literature comprehension, data interpretation, and conversing in an active learning environment. Note: The Adobe City of Salt Lake Walking Tour: Pioneers came to Utah from the East with few building tools and their own ideas of how houses should look. But there just weren't enough trees to make log cabins or frame homes. Fortunately, some had come from the Southwest, or even Europe, and they'd seen adobes. They put the two traditions together and built homes in familiar styles with this new material. This walking tour will be led by Osher Instructor Laurie Bryant, who taught the Osher class Tales of a Mud Brick City this past spring.
